You're not invisible.

You're indistinguishable.

There's a difference. And it changes the fix.

Invisible means no one sees you.

Indistinguishable means they see you, scroll, and forget.

One is a reach problem. One is a positioning problem.

Most experts have the second and chase the first.

"My expertise will speak for itself."

Skill is the floor, not the differentiator.

Expertise can't speak when it sounds like everyone else.

Why you blend in:

- Your bio says "I help" without saying who
- You list services, not a problem you fix
- Your content could be signed by anyone
- You compete on credentials, not on stance

Generic: "I help people grow."

Positioned: "I help solo coaches under $10k/month build a system that gets them booked."

One is a platitude. One is a market.

This week, write three lines:

1. The exact person you serve.
2. The specific problem you fix.
3. A stance no peer dares to repeat.

If a stranger can't echo it after one scroll, the market won't either.
