Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your pricing looks random.

And buyers can feel it.

The price is not what they reject.
The guess is.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

If your price ends in 97 or 47, you picked it because it looked cheap.

That is not strategy.
That is superstition.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Premium prices feel chosen.
Random prices feel guessed.

Guessed pricing signals your value was guessed too.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Rounding up is not greed.
It is confidence.

$3,000 lands harder than $2,497 because the number sounds decided.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your tiers confuse buyers when the math does not add up.

If Tier 2 is 60% more work for 30% more money, you are undercharging the anchor.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Discount codes train buyers to wait.
Anchored prices train them to decide.

Train them to decide.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Comment "BRAND"

and I will show you the 3 pricing signals that make your offer feel guessed — so buyers stop stalling.