Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your price is not too high.

Your value is not obvious.

A thread on why prospects say "it's too expensive" and what they actually mean.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

"Too expensive" almost never means the number is wrong.

It means the outcome is unclear.

Nobody hesitates on a price tag when the result is undeniable.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Cheap and expensive are not numbers.

They are feelings.

Make the transformation specific and the same price suddenly feels cheap.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

You are not competing on price.

You are competing on certainty.

The buyer who trusts the outcome will always pay more than the buyer who is "comparing options."

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Discounting signals doubt.

Every time you drop your price to close, you teach the market your offer was not worth the original number.

You can't discount your way to a premium brand.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Raise the value, not the objection handling.

Before you rewrite the sales page, rewrite the promise.

A clear, named outcome closes what a clever script never will.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Struggling to defend your price?

Comment BRAND and I'll show you the one line in your offer that is making you sound expensive.