Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your offer does not have a pricing problem.

It has a sameness problem.

Buyers cannot tell you apart from the other 12 tabs they just closed.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Nobody buys the "best" option.

They buy the one that feels made for them.

Generic offers lose to specific ones every single time.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Read your offer out loud.

If a competitor could copy-paste it onto their site and nothing would feel off — the offer is invisible.

Sameness is the real silent killer.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Three signs your offer blends in:

- You describe what you do, not what changes.
- Your buyer is "anyone who wants growth."
- Your package is a list of calls and PDFs.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Stop pitching your process.

Start pitching the version of them they become after working with you.

That is the only thing buyers are actually paying for.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Specific beats better.

A narrower promise, a sharper buyer, a named method — that is what makes an offer unignorable.

Blend in and you become a price comparison. Stand out and you become the obvious choice.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your offer is not wrong.
It is just invisible.

Comment "BRAND" and I will show you the one line that makes buyers stop scrolling and start reading.