Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your offer isn't underperforming.

Its name is.

If the buyer can't repeat it from memory, they won't buy it, share it, or remember you exist next month.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

A generic name tells the market you're generic.

"1:1 Coaching Program" is not a brand. It's a utility.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Great offer names do three things:

- Name the outcome, not the format.
- Create a category of one.
- Are impossible to confuse with a competitor.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Compare these two:

"3-Month Marketing Consulting"
vs.
"The 90-Day Inbound Engine"

Same product. One is a price negotiation. The other is a decision.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

If your offer needs a paragraph to explain, the name is doing zero work.

Your offer name is the first word of your sales pitch. Make it carry weight.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Rename your offer today.

Use this test: Say the name out loud. If a stranger can't guess the outcome from the words alone, rewrite it.

Clarity compounds. Confusion kills.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

DM "BRAND"

I'll send you my 4-word framework for naming offers that close themselves.