Posting every day feels like progress.

It's actually how you hide.

You stayed consistent for a year. 300 posts. Showed up daily.
And still — nobody can say what you actually stand for.
That's not a reach problem. It's a recall problem.

More content doesn't fix a forgettable message.

A forgettable idea posted 30 times is still forgettable.

Volume just gives people more ways to forget you.

Signs posting has become your hiding place:

- You post daily but can't name your one idea
- You track post count, not what landed
- Every post starts a brand-new topic
- "More content" is how you dodge the hard call

Volume: stay consistent, get likes, stay invisible.

Memorable: repeat one idea, get quoted, get booked.

The feed rewards the busy. The market rewards the clear.

Do this week:

1. Pick the one idea you want to own.
2. Say it 10 ways instead of saying 10 things.
3. Post half as often. Make each one impossible to forget.
