You think a lower price closes faster.

It doesn't.

The cheaper you go, the harder you have to sell.

Cheap doesn't read as accessible.

It reads as uncertain.

Buyers don't bargain-hunt the work that scares them. They overpay for it.

Lower the price —

and you raise the resistance.

Now you're answering twice as many objections for half the fee.

Four tells you're competing on price, not value:

- Every call ends with "can you do it for less?"
- You quote, then immediately defend the number
- Clients ghost, then come back when you discount
- You're always busy and never paid enough

A discount feels generous.

It is not.

It teaches your buyer that your first number was a lie.

Do this week:

1. Raise your number by 30%.
2. Sharpen the outcome it buys.
3. Stop apologizing in the proposal.
