You don't need another credential.

You need a public stance.

Buyers don't hire the most qualified. They hire the most certain.

"Once I get the cert, I'll start posting."

That's not preparation.

That's a permission slip you're writing to yourself.

A degree proves you studied.

A point of view proves you've decided.

Clients pay for the second one.

Four ways your credential trap shows up:

- You hedge every opinion with "it depends"
- You list courses in your bio, not beliefs
- You wait to feel ready before you publish
- You watch louder peers win the work you can do

Expertise is what you know.

Authority is what you'll say.

One is private. The other is paid.

Do this week:

1. Write the one line you'd defend in public.
2. Post it without softeners.
3. Stop adding letters. Start adding posts.
