The best coach in the room
isn't the one who gets hired.

The clearest one is.

You know your craft.
You have results.

But when you introduce yourself,
people nod and move on.

That isn't a skill gap.
It's a clarity gap.

Expertise is a commodity.
Clarity is a currency.

The market pays for positioning, not pedigree.

Why your expertise stays invisible:

- You lead with the method, not the outcome
- You name the skill, not the problem
- You stack credentials, not decisions
- You compete on depth, not difference

Expertise says:
"Here is what I do."

Positioning says:
"Here is who I save."

Name the problem you own.
Name the person you save.
Name the outcome they get.

That is positioning.
That is how expertise becomes visible.

Comment or DM "BRAND"

- hard to trust
- hard to understand
- easy to ignore

No fluff. Just clarity.
