You don't lose the sale at the price.

You lose it at "here's what I do."

Buyers don't hire activities.

They hire outcomes.

The moment you describe your work, you stop selling it.

"I help coaches with mindset and sales."

What did I just promise?

Nothing. I described a vending machine.

Signs your positioning is still about you:

- Your bio is a services list
- Discovery calls feel like interviews
- Prospects say "let me know when you have time"
- You quote hourly rates

Try this: "I help [WHO] go from [BAD] to [BETTER] without [PAIN]."

If it could describe ten other people, it's not positioning.

It's noise with your face on it.

This week:

1. Audit your bio. Cut every activity line.
2. Write the outcome sentence.
3. Show it to three past clients. Adjust until they nod.
