Posting every day isn't consistency.

It's confusion with a schedule.

Content without strategy is busyness pretending to be business.

You're not behind because you didn't post enough.

You're stuck because what you posted never had a point.

More content doesn't build a brand.

More clarity does.

The feed rewards the specific,
not the frequent.

Why your content isn't converting:

- You post tips, not positions
- You speak to everyone, so nobody listens
- You rotate topics, so no one remembers
- You reward effort instead of outcomes

Volume is easy.
Clarity is rare.

That's why clear people get paid
and busy people burn out.

Pick one problem you own.
Pick one person you save.
Post only what proves both.

That is a content strategy.
Everything else is journaling.
