YOUR PRICE IS A GUESS

"I quoted $1500. Then $800. Then $3000. I have no idea what my work is actually worth."

She seems tight on budget. I'll lower it.

He looks established. I'll triple it.

My competitor charges $500. So I should too...

THE REAL PROBLEM

Your price changes based on how you feel that morning

Random pricing is the loudest sign that you do not believe in your own value.

THE SHIFT

Stop pricing your time. Start pricing the transformation you deliver.

Buyers do not compare hourly rates. They compare the size of the result you produce.

THE PRICING ANCHORS

4 anchors that make your price feel earned

Cost of Inaction

What is the problem costing them every month they keep ignoring it?

Size of the Outcome

Bigger transformation deserves a bigger number. Pricing follows promise.

Speed of the Result

Faster results carry a higher price. People pay a premium for time saved.

Depth of Their Desire

The more painful the problem, the less price matters. Anchor to urgency.

THE MIRROR

Which column sounds like your pricing?

SIGNAL	RANDOM	ANCHORED
Anchor	Competitor rates	Client outcome
Logic	"Hours x rate"	"Result x value"
Quote	Read the room	Same every time
Pushback	Discount fast	Hold the price
Feeling	"Hope they say yes"	"This is the price"

3 STEPS TO FIX IT

Stop pulling prices out of thin air

1. Calculate Their Cost
   Quantify what the problem costs them every month. That number sets your floor.

2. Set a Single Number
   Pick one price. Write it down. Say it the same way to every prospect.

3. Stop Quoting on Calls
   Never let your nervous system price your work. The number is decided before the call.

> PRO TIP
> If you flinch when you say your price, the problem is not your price. It is your conviction. Practice it out loud until it sounds normal.

@SAMTRABULSI

PRICING ALL OVER THE PLACE?

Comment BRAND and I will show you the anchor your pricing is missing right now.

COMMENT "BRAND"

@samtrabulsi · Brand Victory