Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Nobody is "thinking about it."

They are politely waiting for you to stop selling so they can leave the call.

The problem is not the price.

The problem is your offer made them feel nothing.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your offer is technically correct and emotionally dead.

You listed deliverables. You listed bonuses. You listed timelines.

You forgot to make them feel the cost of staying exactly where they are.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

The buyer is not asking "is this worth it?"

They are asking "do I believe my life changes if I say yes?"

If your offer cannot answer that in one sentence, no price will fix it.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

5 signs your offer creates zero excitement:

- The result sounds vague.
- The promise sounds safe.
- You sell time, not transformation.
- You hide behind features.
- You never name the pain.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Cheap offers compete on price.

Expensive offers compete on desire.

The work is not making it cheaper.

The work is making the outcome so specific they cannot pretend they do not want it.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

A great offer does three things:

1. Names the exact pain.
2. Promises one specific result.
3. Removes the biggest fear.

Skip any of these and you are asking them to buy on hope.

People do not buy on hope.

Sam Trabulsi
@samtrabulsi

Your offer is not boring.

It is just not finished.

Comment "BRAND"

and I will show you the one line missing from your offer that is killing the excitement.