You're an expert.

You're not an authority.

That's why the market keeps picking someone less qualified.

You kept adding credentials.

Nothing changed.

The market wasn't looking for more proof.

It was looking for a stance.

Expert is a level.

Authority is a position.

Different game. Different rules. Different pay.

Four shifts that turn expertise into authority:

- Own a point of view, not a method
- Lead with conviction, not credentials
- Sell a stance, not a skill
- Say the thing no one else will say

Expert: "Here's what I can do."

Authority: "Here's what I believe."

The market pays for belief.

Pick one belief worth defending.

Put it inside your offer.

Say it weekly until the market repeats it back to you.

That's the whole move.
