Your content isn't underperforming.

It's overperforming for the wrong outcome.

Every "great post!" is the audience saying: I got it for free.

Saves climb. DMs go quiet.

That's not a growth signal.

That's the algorithm rewarding posts that finish the job in the feed.

Education builds consumers.

Authority builds clients.

Buyers don't hire teachers. They hire people who name the gap and close it faster than they could alone.

Four signs your content is training consumers, not buyers:

- Saves up, DMs flat
- Every post is a complete answer
- Top comment is "so helpful!"
- You're posting more to fix it

Closed loops produce applause.

Open loops produce appointments.

If your post can be screenshotted and used without you,
you're a textbook — not an authority.

Do this week:

1. Name the gap before you name the solution.
2. End with the cost of inaction, not the cure.
3. Replace "try this" with "here's what I do."
